Reagan's Tax Reform Plan: Richest and Poorest Pay Less

By Anne Swardson
Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The tax-reform proposal that President Ronald Reagan was scheduled to announce Tuesday night would reduce taxes most for the very richest and the very poorest Americans, according to administration sources and documents.

if the Reagan plan passes Conwess and is enacted, individuals would pay 5.2 percent less on the average in federal taxes than they do under current law, and corporations would pay 22.5 percent more. That is a smaller shift of tax burdens from individuals to business than was proposed in the U.S. Treasury Department's original tax revision plan,

Under the new proposal, taxpayers earning more than $200,000 a year would pay 18.7 percent of their income in taxes instead of the current 21 percent, a tax reduction of 10.7 percent. On the low end, Arose earning less than $10,000 would pay 0.9 percent of their income in taxes rather than the current 1.4 percent, and those making between $10,000 and $20,000 a year would pay 2.5 percent instead

The hypothetical tax reduction would be 35.5 percent for the low-est income bracket, 22.8 percent for the next-lowest and 13.5 percent for taxpayers earning from $15,000 to $20,000 a year.

People in the four income brack-ets up to $200,000 would get larger tax cuts than under the first Treasury plan, while those earning above $200,000 would get a smaller leased to the public.

The new package would have three personal rates of 15, 25 and 35 percent and a top corporate rate of 33 percent, with lower rates for smaller companies. Interest on a mortgage for a principal home would remain fully deductible. Like the Treasury's first plan, the president's proposal would restrict deductions for interest payments on second homes, auto, consumer and bank loans to the total amount of each taxpayer's income from investments, plus $5,000. However, these limitations would be phased in over a period of up to 10 years. Under the new proposal, deductions for business meals would be more generous than in the first Half of capital gains would be current 40 percent, and the defini-tion of capital asset would be narrowed somewhat. Treasury One, as the first plan is called, proposed taxing capital gains as ordinary in-come and indexing the value of assets to inflation, a version that would have raised considerably

As in the first plan, state and local taxes would no longer be deductible from federal income tax. income averaging, allowing taxpayers to average years with unusually high earnings with those before and after them, would be repealed under the new plan. Contributions to charitable oranizations would be fully deductible, and contributions of stocks or property could be deducted at fair market value. Both of those are changes from limitations proposed in the earlier plan that were strongly opposed by private universities, museums and others. The presi-dent's proposal, like its predecessor, would repeal the provision letting taxpayers who use the standard deduction deduct charitable contributions.

The tax cut for the lower-income taxpayers is large partly because President Reagan's plan calls for a bigger-than-anticipated increase in the zero-brackei amount, also called the standard deduction, used now by two-thirds of all taxpayers - those who do not itemize de-

The case has posed serious probms for Italy in its relations with the Soviet Union and the rest of the East bloc, and there have been widespread but unconfirmed reports of diplomatic pressure on the Italian government to acquit the three Bulgarians on trial.

The judge is known to have ex-pressed grave worries in private over the course the trial will take. For example, he is described as being concerned over the extent to which other West European gov-ernments will cooperate with Italy by extraditing various suspects now in their jails who could east further light on the case.

One of the first moves Monday by the prosecutor, Antonio Marini, was to ask for the extradition of suspected Turkish terrorists and drug merchants who are believed to have links with the men on trial.

Mr. Santiapichi has been adamant in insisting that the case will be tried on its merits, regardless of the political and diplomatic pressures. "I don't care what they're saying out there," he told a visitor to his office recently.

Reagan Calls Democrats Weak on Communism And Divisive at Home

By David Hoffman

Washington Post Service
MIAMI — President Ronald Reagan, in a Memorial Day political speech has sharply accused Democrats of ignoring the dangers of Communism abroad and of "pitting white against black, women against men, young against old" at

Speaking Monday to 1,600 contributors to Senator Paula Hawkins, a Florida Republican, Mr. Reagan combined an appeal for continued Republican control of the Senate with pointed criticism of Democrats on the issue of military

The opposition often acts like a weaker America is a safer America," he said, "Like it or not, that's the kind of bizarre logic that will carry the day if the other party regains control of the Senate. Mr. Reagan also accused political opponents of ignoring Commu-mist dangers in Nicaragna.

"Many of those opposing our efforts have steadfastly refused to acknowledge that the rulers of the regime in Managua are, by their own admission," Mr. Reagan said, "hard-core Communists and consider themselves part of the international Communist movement."

The president departed from his prepared text to comment that citizens were confused about the Nicaraguan conflict and declared, to applause, "It's the freedom fighters against the Communists."

"Closing our eyes and making a wish, which seems about the only course of action our opponents will support, won't make this threat go away," Mr. Reagan said. "We need to assist those governments target-ed by the Communists, and it is imperative that we support those brave individuals who are putting their lives on the line to bring democracy to Nicaragua."

In opening his speech, Mr. Reagan said that Republicans "have been blessed with grass-roots supporters who are committed to the ideals of individual freedom, family values, free enterprise and a strong America."

"While the other party has tried to build a coalition by segmenting America into warring factions — over the past years pitting white against black, women against men, young against old — we've taken a more positive path," he said.

The remark was almost identical to one that former President Jimmy black from white, Jew from Chris- try's airline.

After Mr. Reagan called on Mr. Carter to apologize, Mr. Carter said the stridency of his remark had been a mistake. Larry Speakes, the White House to the rebels fighting the govern-ment of Nicaragua. He has run into opposition on both fronts from Republicans as well as Democrats. For example, the Republican-controlled Senate, where 22 Republican members face re-election next year, voted to hold Pentagon spending increases to the level of inflation for next year. Mr. Reagan renewed the administration's assertion that Cuba had been engaged in illicit drug trading.

"I have a message for Fidel Cas-tro about the drug trade," Mr. Rea-gan said. "He can tell American television networks anything be wants, but nobody in his regime is going to get away with this dirty drug business."

Mr. Reagan paid tribute to Mrs.

Hawkins by noting that the Democrats had no women in the Senate. whereas the Republicans had two, and and by saying that she had compiled an "amazing" record.

By Edward Walsh Washington Post Service ABBASSIYE, Lebanon - The men and boys of the village, their faces grim and their voices low, moved slowly away from the cemetery along the hot, dusty main vil-

At the age of 24, Mr. Sayi was killed in Beirut, fighting, his neighbors here said Monday, for the control of this and the other cities and villages of southern Lebanon that villages of southern Lebanon that recently saw an end to almost three years of Israeli military occupation. Mr. Sayi was a fighter in the Shiite Moslem militia Amal that is fighting for control of the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Chatila in Beirut. "We think fighting in Beirut is the same as fighting in southern Lebanon," said Hussein Fawaz, a local Amal leader here. "We fight-in Beirut to protect the South."

Amal went into the Beirut refugee camps to disarm the Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas who have returned there. The militia, the strongest force in southern Lebanon now that the Israeli army has almost completed its withdrawal, is determined that the Palestinians will never again use southern Lebanon as a base to attack Israel.

At best, the return of the PLO toits former strongholds would mean more suffering for the residents of southern Lebanon when the Israelis mounted their inevitable counterstrike. Lebanon Is a Memory

Its conflicts seem not only beyond cure but even beyond understanding.
When last we read of Christian militiamen slaughtering Palestinians there in 1982. Israel's occupying army was beld responsible, even by Israelis. Now Shiite Moslem militiamen are butchering Palestinians in the same camps, Sabra and Chatila, and the world just shrugs. The Christian-led government has all but evaporated. Lebanon's Syrian protectors accuse a former ally, Yasser Arafat, of provoking the slaughter to get back at rival Palestinians.

Lebanon is being cut by a hundred knives, rent by a thousand vendettas. Terror is random. Last week 50 people were killed and 175 wounded by a car bomb in Christian East Beirut. No one is sure who did it, or why. By any plausible definition, Lebanon has ceased to be a nation.

Until 1982, Mr. Arafat's PLO provided a shadowy government, in tense competition with Syrian forces and Israeli-aided Lebanese. Israel smashed this order, but Moslems and Syrians combined to block the Christians it sponsored. French and American troops, too. were chased out by the terror. The Syrians remain, but they are plainly not in command. These ghastly divisions were inherent in Lebanon's origins. France shaped its borders after the the collapse of the Ottoman empire in 1920. Thrown together in the new state were Maronite Christians on Mount Lebanon, the Moslem and Druse communities of the coastal regions and the Moslems of the Bekaa, the eastern valley, who probably would have pre-

The president had to be a Maronite Christian, the prime minister a Sunni Moslem, the chairman of Parliament a Shirte Moslem, the defense minister a Druse. But demographics gradually unsettled this arrangement. The Moslem populations grew, yet Christians tenaciously dominated commerce and government. The rival factions formed their own private armies and progressively challenged the center in Beirut. A full-scale civil war erupted in the 1970s, magnified by the influx of Palestinians expelled from Jordan.

Syria intervened in 1976, with the Arab League's blessing, but it could only play the factions against each other. Israel intervened in 1982, allegedly to disarm the Palestinians but actually to try to restore the Christian dominance. In the shadows there arose vet another army, the Islamic Jihad terrorists, inspired and perhaps directed from Iran. Sectarian and family feuds engendered by all this violence have made even simple ceasefires impossible. A once thriving economy has been destroyed. The wealthiest and ablest Lebanese have long since fled. The United Nations and a few other agencies dispense humanitarian aid and medical help, but no law now governs in that unhappy land. It has swallowed all foreign illusions, most recently the strategic interests that a series of American presidents proclaimed until just two years ago. Lebanon is more a memory than a society.

A Good Year for NATO

Other Opinion

NATO may be one of the few measurable national security successes of the Reagan period. Final results aren't in, but enough progress has been recorded for the man who counts most in NATO affairs these days, Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, to let the alliance slip a key deadline that he and Senator William Roth of Delaware set for it last year. At that time they put in an amendment requiring NATO's European members to improve promptly the alliance's capacity to meet a conventional attack; otherwise America would start reducing its troop levels. The amendment lost, barely, but NATO got the message. Its new secretary-general, Lord Carrington, helped convince members that what they first saw as a threatening and intrusive American diktat was actually a great policy opportunity. The alliance went on to make the requisite commitments regarding munitions stocks ("sustainability") and reinforcement facilities ("infrastructure"). As a result, Senator Nunn says it has earned another year to show it can deliver on those commitments.

Look closely here. Senator Nunn and his policy comrades Bernard Rogers, NATO's military commander, and David Abshire, the U. S. ambassador to NATO, are not talking just about hardware. Nor are they talking just about the familiar grinding NATO argument over "burden sharing" — whether the allies are pulling their weight. They are talking about the readiness of the alliance to perform its prime function of deterring a conventional Soviet attack without having to threaten implicitly to go nuclear at a relatively early stage.

So last year's Nunn amendment is on hold.

There is, however, a new Nunn amendment, addressing an alarming disparity in how much NATO and the Warsaw Pact are getting for what they spend. The Europeans have been meeting the goal of a 3 percent annual increase in defense outlays; the United States has exceeded it in the last four years by $120 billion. Even before these increases, however, NATO was spending more than the Pact countries, and producing less. In 1984 it was outproduced by ratios of 2-to-1 to 5-to-1 in major systems: 3,650 to 1,760 in tanks, for instance. The conspicuous exception was, as you would expect of Atlantic allies, in big surface ships.

The trouble, Mr. Nunn says, is that NATO countries wastefully develop and build com-peting systems. His new amendment fences off $200 million for development projects conducted with allies, requires the Pentagon to consider arms cooperation possibilities at an early procurement stage, and makes the Pentagon test competing U.S. and European systems against each other. This is nuts and bolts stuff, lacking in the drama of the earlier NATO initiative but promising immense rewards for the common defense.

The second message seems to say: Palestinians

Four Criteria for Judging Reform of Income Tax

WASHINGTON — Now that President Reagan has sounded the trumpets for a charge against the Internal Revenue code, the hard work of tax simplification and reform begins. How are we going to judge the merits and demerits of what all these different people and groups are pro-posing? It helps at the start of a prolonged process like this to jot down the criteria by which you want to judge the final product. When it's over, you can look back at the list and decide how well they have done. My checklist consists of four Ps. The first is productivity. This is a practical imperative. We live in an increasingly competitive international economic environment. American workers are competing for jobs not just with each other but also with the workers of Japan, Western Europe and the Third World. American companies are competing with their companies for markets and for profits. This is a fact of life, maybe the most important reality we face. No theoretical or ideological or emotional argument for "socking it" to this group or that can be given greater weight than that practical reality. Many reformers want to make business in general, or a particular industry, "pay up." That's fine, but not if critical as payroll taxes for Social the cost is to make them noncompetitive in the world market.

This criterion should be of help in deciding which business tax preferences are defensible and which are not. There is a difference between service industries like restaurants, for example, and international businesses like steel or computers. Diners don't fly to London to get a better tax break on a meal, but they can do their resource buying or investing over-seas. The tax code has to reflect those realities, and emphasize incentives to investment over consumption.

The second criterion is progressivity. The income tax system is prossive; it is based on ability to pay. The rates increase as the tax bracket rises. All the major proposals reduce the number of brackets, and that automatically reduces the progressivity of the system. You can offset that by closing down some of the deductions or exemptions that benefit mainly upper-income taxpayers. It takes a sharp pencil to calculate who the winners and losers will be. But the criterion has to be that progressivity is maintained in the income tax system. That is particularly

Security continue to climb and as state and local taxes (generally less progressive than federal taxes) rise to meet the growing responsibilities of those levels of government.

The third criterion is principle. When you tackle something as complex as the Internal Revenue code. there are constant temptations to cut deals to take care of this or that constituency. Any reform will obviously require compromise, and there is nothing dishonorable about that. But compromise becomes dangerous when those who are not party to the deals cannot see any principle that is employed to guide the choice. Then cynicism undermines the product. Since the whole purpose of reform is to restore confidence in the fairness of the system, visible principle has to be maintained. Do we give tax breaks to real estate? Then let's debate the principle of home ownership that lies behind these breaks, and see if we want to apply it to commercial buildings and to resort properties.

Are we going to repeal the deduct-ibility of state and local property taxes? Then let's debate the principle of federalism that underlies that deductibility, and see if it is a principle we are prepared to abandon or compro-mise for the billions of revenues the federal government will gain. In every case, let's put the principle front and center, and measure the tax code changes by that principle.

My final criterion would be poverty, and maybe it belongs at the top of he checklist. The poor and near-poor will have fewer lobbyists and advocates outside the doors of the Ways and Means and the Finance committees than anyone else - and they have a large stake in the outcome.

Just how large is demonstrated in a study last week from the Coalition on Block Grants and Human Needs called "Untax the Poor." Using data from the House Ways and Means Committee, it showed that a family of four at the poverty level paid 10.5 percent of its income in federal taxes this year — two and a half times as much as it did in 1978.

Many families just beyond the poverty line are being taxed back into poverty by the existing code. That is probably not something anyone in-tended to see happen in the last big round of tax revision, but it shows the lack of attention the poor characteristically receive in this process. It will shame us all if it happens again.

From the Price of Bagels to the Meaning of Eternity

N EW YORK — Nations, like people, have public and private selves. To foreigners of my political persuasion, the United States offers a public image less than beguiling — a gigantic militarist state, led by an aged neo-monarch, guided frequently by advisers of dubious intellectual or even moral quality, directed offstage by covert interests of finance and ideology, pur-suing foreign policies of terrifying unreliability. Doe are very different from their predecessors in the 1950s, just as the everyday quality of American life has mutated startlingly. It used to astonish me with its infallible efficiency; now it more often amuses me by its old-fashioned charm. For the first time in my life, it is sometimes possible these days for a visitor from Asia or Europe to be a little patronizing about the Americans!

But in profounder ways, I find, the country has remained essentially and delightfully itself. The things that gave me most pleasure when I first came to America give me most pleasure still, and seem to have just the same effect on newcomers now as they did upon me when I first disembarked at Pier 90 from the SS Mauretania.

There is, for instance, the popular sense of earnestness. I love this old quality. I love the slow steady cadences of American talk, which make more mercurial conversationists, like us Welsh, feel like sheepdogs yapping around methodical sheep, but which lead on so often to decent conclusions, conscientionsly arrived at. I love the feeling, still more common in America than in most countries, that grand issues of good and evil preoccupy so many minds, at office desk or restaurant table, and that at any moment, without awkwardness, one may shift the chat from the price of bagels to the Meaning of Eternity. Now as always. I relish the tireless ingenuity of the people. American cars may be passe these days. American telephones are not what they were, but in everyday small devices, wrinkles and innovations, your American remains peerless.

Every time I visit, some passing new fancy enthralls me, whether it be a new posture of roller-skating, a new hat craze, a new bit of slang, yet another gastronomic fashion (Thai Nouvelle?), a nonsmokers' motel in Dallas, a gadget for starting the car while you are still in bed, or just another of those inexhaustible ideas of advertisement and ingratiation that give life and fantasy to any commercial midway, anywhere in the country — always something new, for better or for worse, for fortune or for bankruptcy.

And the fun of it all - still incomparable, whoever is president, still bubbling irrepressibly out of the national psyche! When I visited the casinos of Atlantic City, I knew full well that almost everything around me was founded upon plain greed, not least upon my own, yet I enjoyed every minute of it. The stupendous vulgarity! The preposterous grandeur! The meticulously calculated but still persuasive courtesy!

I laughed with all the old delight when, asking a doorman if Trump Plaza had any rooms left, I heard the request translated into "Hey, Joe, what d'va know about the availability status?" My heart sang when I asked the waitress for a Giant rather than a Jumbo, Margerita, and she said Which is that now, the big one or the small?"

I stand gratefully amazed, as ever, at the con-

tagions stamina of everyday America. I am more than myself when I am here, because I catch some of the irresistible energy of the place, which expresses itself not just in an infinite capacity for staying up late but also in a tireless readiness to take an interest in things, perform small kind-nesses, remember unnecessary allusions and master given names. It took stamina for Americans to become Americans in the first place, on those lonely seashore settlements long ago, and a sense of personal diligence and resolution re-mains the most admirable private quality of the Americans today, whatever its ends or motives.

Which is the truer self, the public or the private, it is beyond my competence to speculate. In any case, you may think it as much an irrelevance as an impertinence for a flibberty-gibbet alien like me, never settling in America for more than a few months, to express opinions on these matters at all. What need Americans care, out of the majesty of their superpowerness, for the views of a wandering Welsh essayist? You're probably right, but thanks anyway.

LONDON: Prince Tokugawa Iyesato, president of the Japanese House of Peers, has arrived in London. Speaking of his recent visit to the United States, the prince said that it would remain in his memory forever. "I was charmed by the American people," he said.
"There never has been any real serious trouble between the American nation and my own -and I don't think there ever will be. Japan wants peace, and wants it badly — although, of course, not at an unreasonable price. The talk of a 'Yellow Peril' is absurd," the prince continued. "The Japanese nation, although ever expanding, has no idea of sweeping the world. This ambition — which people have credited Japan with possessing — is no part of the Japanese policy, and never will be."

possible exception of Angola, are reassessing allegiances, offering political nonalignment and economic safeguards in exchange for badly needed Western aid and investment. In a bid to encourage this change, the United States and Portugal are involved in a tripartite cooperation experiment coupling U.S. financial resources with Portuguese technical and cultural know-how for projects suggested by Portuguese-speaking African countries. The idea was recently subjected to close scrutiny at a triangular seminar in Lisbon. Emerging as a priority on the Afri-

aid into Mozambique to underpin a to the debilitating civil wars in Mozambique. Angola and Namibia as a prerequisite to the development of the area. Implicit in the plea was a demand for Washington to pressure Pretoria on three points: Deliver an internationally acceptable solution in Namibia, respect your solemn undertakings toward Mozambique and end your attacks on Angola. The Africans, while not demanding white South African suicide, made clear their view that the West had not acted decisively enough to achieve peace in southern Africa and that the United States had frequently sent confused signals to Pretoria and others in the area. In moderated language, they left no doubt that for them the United States had been equivocal and contradictory in its policy toward Mozambique. Washington currently seeks to channel $60 million worth of aid, including some $3 million earmarked for nonlethal military assistance, to President Samora Machel's hardpressed regime, but there is opposition from a conservative lobby in Congress sympathetic to the Mozambican guerrilla movement. Renamo. In reply, the U.S. deputy assistant secretary of state for African affairs. Frank Wisner, said here that the United States and its allies want peace in Mozambique. He condemned the anguish of continuing violence and aggression there, which he said served no one's interests.

Mr. Wisner's words mesh with converging opinion in Pretoria and Lisbon about the importance of success for the Nkomati peace and secu-rity accord signed 14 months ago between Maputo and Pretoria. The two neighbors agreed then to cease support for rebel movements based in their territories, but so far the results have disappointed Maputo. Nevertheless the United States believes the accord must be seen to be working so as to ease the complexities of solutions in Namibia and Angola.

A notable feature of the Lisbon seminar was the fact that five years ago the radicalism and anti-Ameri-canism of most of the African participants would have invalidated it. Today, judging by many of the views expressed at the gathering, the mine field of post-colonial complexes is well on its way to being cleared. But there was a vital missing link.

Angola, beset by internal rifts, political equivocations and a giant grudge against Portugal, stayed away from the conference. Its attitude was a criticism not only of Lisbon but also of Washington, which persists in a two-track policy — supportive of major

U.S. investments, like Gulf Oil's Cabinda installations, but refusing dip-lomatic recognition until the Cuban troops go home. The United States also insists on a political settlement of the government's 10-year-old guerrilla war against the Western-backed UNITA rebels, a view vigorously re-stated by Mr. Wisner in Lisbon.

Whatever the rights or wrongs of America's policy toward Angola, its whole approach to the region is under close domestic scrutiny, with the Chester Crocker-Frank Wisner doctrine of "constructive engagement" increasingly questioned. A historic moment may be nearing in southern Africa. It remains to be seen whether trilateral politics can work better than bilateral bargainin

Assassinations Matter

Regarding "Lo, America's President Turns Into a King" (May 20): William Pfaff seems to trivialize assassination. He gives an impressive list of victims of assassination between 1890 and 1914, as if the world had gone on pretty much the same without them. But that era closed with the outbreak of World War I, precipitated by the death of the last victim on his list. The destabilizing effect of those killings played a sig-nificant role in creating the climate of tension that resulted in that catastrophe, which paved the way for most of the horrors of this century. To treat so lightly the past consequences of this evil, and then to discredit the security arrangements of President Reagan today, is irresponsible.

Defense: How Much For What?

By Tom Wicker

N EW YORK — On Monday.
Memorial Day tribute was paid to Americans who died in the Civil War and on the battlefields of Cuba. the Philippines, Europe, Siberia, the Pacific, Korea, Vietnam, Lebanon and Grenada. This is a good time to think about the vitally important de-bate on the 1986 military budget. The costly Reagan buildup will be slowed, but how and by how much?

That buildup has focused primarily on new weapons and hardware, not all of it necessary or effective, rather than on the efficiency and readiness of the armed forces. These facts from the Center for Defense Information in Washington offer a vivid picture of what has been happening:

• Congress has approved 95.7 percent (if we adjust the figures for inflation) of the Reagan administration's requests for the military in fiscal years 1981 through 1985.

• In the last six years, starting in the Carter administration, the mili-tary budget more than doubled; weapons procurement has nearly tri-pled from the $35.3 billion that Con-gress approved in 1980. Spending for new weapons is the fastest growing part of the federal budget, outstripping even the growth in debt service. The cost of preparing for nuclear war with the Soviet Union — even under Mr. Reagan's sensible dictum that such a war cannot be won and must never be fought — has grown from $29.8 billion in 1980 to the $77.5 billion he requested for 1986. By his estimates, the costs of U.S. nuclear war-fighting forces will reach $400 to $500 billion by 1990.

• For eight major weapons sys-tems — the MX missile and the Trident II, the Pershing-2 and the Midgetman ballistic missiles, sea- and ground-launched cruise missiles, the B-1B bomber and Mr. Reagan's Strategic Defense Imiative — costs have expanded from $1.2 billion in 1980 to a requested $20 billion in 1986. Navy shipbuilding costs are up from $8.6 billion in 1980 to $11.6 billion in 1985, with $25.1 billion more projected for 1986 and 1987. To keep these figures in perspective, it is necessary to understand what the Center for Defense Information calls the "funding wedge" pattern. That is, "costs are relatively small in the beginning while weapons are in the early stage of development, but climb very rapidly once produc-tion begins." So when Congress approved a number of new weaponssystems requested by Mr. Reagan in 1981 and 1982, it let itself and the taxpayers in for greatly increased . spending three to eight years later.

Once begun, moreover, even as fis-cal and international circumstances change, the momentum of weapons development programs makes them hard to stop, or even slow — witness the many lives of the MX missile, even though it has no secure basing mode and no real mission.

Not only is Congress reluctant to cut off a new weapon and sacrifice the huge sums already spent on it, but most such weapons develop powerful constituencies in the Pentagon and among military contractors and de-congressional districts. Partially for these reasons, the Pentagon, when proposing new weapons, often underestimates their long-term costs. CDI figures show that on average during the 1970s "weapons price estimates grew 50 percent between development and actual production." Similarly, the General Accounting Office estimates that, if average historical trends continue, the Penta-gon's 1984-1988 military spending will be at least $173 billion higher than originally estimated.

These realities suggest that what !the Pentagon spends taxpayers' mon-. ey for is as important as how much it spends. The CDI notes that last year Congress cut Mr. Reagan's military requests by $20.5 billion but took no big "funding wedges" permanently out of the budget. It is easier to cut personnel costs and appropriations for routine items like spare parts and ammunition than it is to climinate big ickets — the useless MX program ($10.4 billion already spent) or the faulty Sergeant York Air Defense Gun ($2.4 billion already spent).

The CDI estimates that $12.6 billion could be sampled in 1956 defense. lion could be saved in 1986 alone by canceling or slowing these and other questionable procurement programs.

But it recommends increasing administration proposals by $1 billion to eliminate a proposed civilian personnel pay cut, and by $600 million to expand army ammunition stocks. The pending congressional budget resolution, setting only the Penta-gon's overall spending limit, is a vital fust step. If restrictive enough, it might even force the Armed Services

Pasteur Institute, Again in the Forefront of Medicine, Battles AIDS

By Amiel Kornel rational Herald Tribune

ARIS — In Louis Pasteur's apartment at 25 Rue du Docteur Roux, women carefully tend to the scientist's personal belongings, dusting the quartz-filled vials in the study and regularly replacing mothballs in the slippers in the closes.

Eighty-nine years after Pasteur's death, they continue to preserve the personal effects of the man, and, in the surrounding buildings of the Pasteur Institute, nearly 500 researchers carry on the scientific tradition that Pasteur imitiated.

Prime Minister Laurent Fabius is to inaugurate a national celebration Monday at the institute to commemorate Pasteur's successful inoculation, in July 1885, of the first human recipient of anti-rabies vaccine. This was the breakthrough that led to the creation of the medical research center.

In Pasteur's basement crypt, mosaics tell the story of his discoveries. Scenes of the brewing of beer, pasteurizing of milk and inoculation nst rabies, as well as pictures depicting his other achievements, adorn the walls of a small, ornate chapel that was commissioned in a neo-Byzantine style by Pasteur's ascetic devotee,

Devoted to the memory of the institute's founder, its directors and chief scientists pay their respects at Pasteur's tomb each year on the anniversary of his death.

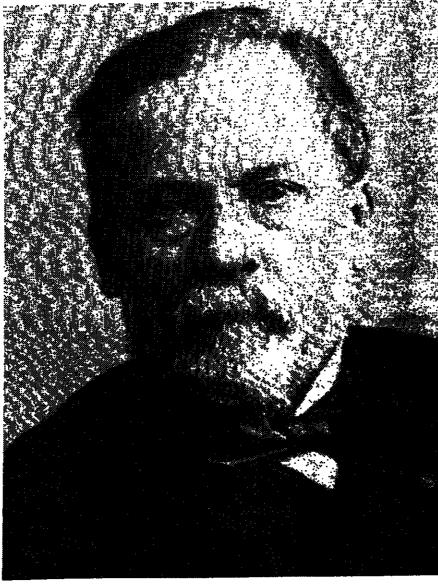

In addition to his discoveries, Pasteur endowed the institute with a formula for excellence a century ago that continues to serve it today. The latest evidence is the growing number of AIDS victims coming to the Pasteur Institute from the United States in the hope of treatment and a cure.

But the French medical researchers, concerned by the rising demand, are becoming reluctant to accept foreign cases. AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is an often-fatal viral disease for which there is no care

"It's crazy," said Dr. Willy Rosenbaum, a researcher at the University of Paris VI who is responsible for the Pasteur Institute's AIDS-related clinical tests. "They imagine that they will come here for two weeks, take something. and leave." People are investing their hopes, he warned, in "a mythical treatment that is completely hypothetical."

These criteria, in addition to a six-week waiting list, apparently have been enough to dis-courage most applicants. At present, Dr. Rosenbaum has only three American patients. The Pasteur Hospital has several dozen Americans with AIDS and a French military hospital near Clamart is treating about 10 Americans.

Health officials acknowledge that they are concerned about the consequences a major influx of Americans could have on the limited medical resources available for AIDS-related care in France. Some French patients are already showing an "aggressive reaction" to the presence of Americans in French hospital beds reserved for AIDS victims, said Dr. Rosen-that can we do? In addition to the HPA 23 results, the Pasteur Institute has achieved other significant successes in AIDS research. Scientists there were the first to detect one of the viral causes of the disease. Further, in conjunction with a French pharmaceutical company, Sanofi, they announced in April the development of a kit for diagnosing the presence of AIDS virus in bottled blood destined for transfusions.

A hundred years after its creation, the institute continues to make major scientific contributions. Many scientists say that the AIDS-related successes exemplify the nature of

The institute's international reputation has helped it attract top scientists from around the world. But economic forces threaten the institute's independence. Because of insufficient funds, the production unit was divided and sold to two French pharmaceutical companies last year. And, even more significantly, the government contribution to the budget has crept up to 50

In a 1973 radio interview, Dr. Jacques Monod, then president of the institute, saw problems in the financing arrangements. Dr. Monod, who won the 1965 Nobel Prize for Medicine along with François Jacob and André Lwoff, warned that if the state's participation rose above 25 percent, "we will lose an originality and independence that Pasteur himself had

But administration behavior toward anti-Communist insurgencies has generally been a mishmash of ad hoc decisions, or nondecisions, about who gets aid, with no apparent consistency or strategy.

Of course, some aspects of the administration's covert assistance to various insurgencies are probably not publicly known.

THER anti-Communist resistance groups, in Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, Angola and Ethiopia, get no overt military aid, although food aid is going, directly or indirectly, to those in Cambodia and Ethiopia. Now, however, there is a drive within the administration and Congress to establish a policy and a strategy for helping armed anti-Communist insurgencies, to show, as a top official put it, that "socialism is not irreversible" and

"the Brezhnev doctrine is dead." That "doctrine," never labeled as such by Moscow, was named by U.S. officials for Leonid I. A 28-page memorandum submitted to the CIA by the Ethiopian People's Democratic Allibatch of 350 guerrilla leaders who would go into western Ethiopia to organize and spread the resistance under way there. The group requested $547,000 for the first six months.

After the CIA said no, the alliance, a coalition of non-Marxist factions formed from other radical groups, ceased to function. It was a victim of Rhetorically, the Reagan administration's harsh military repression and internal squab-support for "freedom fighters" battling Com-bling as well as a lack of outside support.

At the same time, the United States sent more than 325,000 tons of food, worth $178 million, to the Marxist government in Addis Ababa and to private voluntary relief organizations working with it to stem the famine.

These inconsistencies illustrate the swings of a policy caught between conservative hard-liners in the administration and Congress who are implacably hostile to the central government there and pragmatists still hoping to win Ethiopia back from the Russians with inducements. In Mozambique the same U.S. factions are clashing over administration proposals for $15 million in economic support and $3 million in military assistance to the Marxist regime for

Last year, conservatives in Congress killed the administration's $1-million military aid request for that southern African nation.

This year Senator Jesse Helms, Republican of North Carolina, has attached an amendment to the 1986 foreign aid bill that links military aid to free elections, an improved human rights record and a cut in the estimated 1,500 to 2,000 Cuban and East bloc military advisers to 55 - the same conditions and same limit on U.S advisers attached by liberals to aid to El Salvador. Because none of these demands is likely to be met, the amendment probably kills the military aid request. For years the administration has turned its back on the opposition movement, the Mozambican National Resistance, and sought instead to woo the government under President Samora Machel away from its Marxist domestic and pro-Communist foreign policies. The rationale has been, first, to promote detente between white-ruled South Africa and its black-ruled neighbors and, then, to take advan-tage of Mozambique's show of interest in great-

CLA Has Record of Failure In Backing Foes of Soviet

By David B. Ottaway Washington Post Service

ASHINGTON — The United States has a long and checkered re-cord of attempts to aid anti-Comminist movements, dating from the onset of the Cold War. Most of them have failed.

The most ambitious efforts of this kind, mounted by the Central Intelligence Agency, were aimed at Soviet-backed governments or movements in Cuba, Iraq and Angola. None

The CIA did succeed in engineering coups that installed friendly governments in Iran (1953) and Guatemala (1954), and its aid helped to pave the way for the present government of Chile (1973).

It also backed the winning side in the Chadian civil war of 1981-82. Other interventions have been alleged but not documented. It was characteristic of past efforts to begin supporting an insurgency group only to drop it later because of shifting politics at home or changing circumstances abroad. Washington helped organize Cuban exiles after Fidel Castro came to power in 1959 and launched them with feeble backing on the Bay of Pigs invasion in April 1961. Cuban exiles still blame that fiasco on inadequate support from the CIA. In the first Nixon administration, the United States gave extensive covert aid to General in U.S. assistance channeled through Iran, General Barzani marshaled an army he claimed included 100,000 troops.

But when the shah of Iran negotiated a settlement to an old border dispute with Iraq abruptly cut off their support for him.

The decision sent 200,000 to 300,000 Kurds fleeing into Iran, and General Barzani accused Washington and Tehran of betrayal. He went into exile and died in Washington in 1978, a bitter and broken man.

In Angola the United States became deeply involved in the three-way struggle for power among nationalist factions at the time of the former Portuguese colony's independence in

The United States gave principal backing to Holden Roberto, leader of the National Front for the Liberation of Angola, and some aid to the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, hoping to block a third faction, backed by Cuba, the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.

But the the Popular Movement took the capital. When the extent of U.S. secret involvement in the war became known, Congress voted overwhelmingly in late 1975 to ban further military aid to the two pro-Westem Angolan factions.

The National Front quickly collapsed, but the National Union has survived, thanks partly to aid from South Africa.

Now a move is afoot in both houses of Congress to repeal the aid ban in order to again help the National Union.

In Chad the CIA scored its only recent public success. The agency worked with the ntelligence services of Sudan and Egypt to back Hissène Habré in his 1981-82 struggle for power against a Libyan-backed govern-ment headed by Goukouni Oueddei. With French help, Mr. Habré has remained in Regarding Afghanistan, Congress is con-cerned that covert aid may not be reaching its intended recipients and is considering $15 million in overt nonlethal aid.

Congress has appropriated from $380 million to $400 million for covert aid through the CIA to the Afghan rebels since the Soviet intervention in 1979, according to the Federation for American Afghan Action, a support group.

At least $250 million more is expected this year, the federation says.

The Reagan administration took over and vastly expanded a Democratic policy of aiding the Afghan rebels. But limits apparently have been placed on the sophistication of arms that may be provided, with anti-aircraft missiles capable of dealing with Soviet gunships and aircraft in short supply.

The State Department opposes changing the U.S. military aid program to the Afghan rebels into an overt operation, a stand that Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato, a New York Republican, provision, argues that the United States must has attacked as "incredibly convoluted."

"The Soviets know what we're doing" covertly, and it is "ridiculous, absolutely ridiculous" to pretend they do not, Mr. D'Amato said at a May 8 hearing of the Senate appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations.

He summed up the status of U.S. efforts to aid insurgent groups worldwide: "We have such Cambodian refugees camped just inside Thailand. Congress cut off that aid in 1980.

New Berkeley Protests Bring Out Old Leaders

ERKELEY, California — One by one recently, names that recall the social tur-bulence of the 1960s have appeared, as if from the back pages of history, on the arrest logs of Berkeley's Police Department.

Angela Davis, the black militant who was the Communist Party candidate for vice president in 1980 and 1984; Daniel Ellsberg, the antiwar activist; and Cesar Chavez, who led strikes by the United Farm Workers, have been among the 650 people arrested since April 16 in protests against the University of California's investments in corporations and banks doing business in South Africa.

Baldish and a bit pannchy, Mario Savio, the student firebrand who led the University of California's Free Speech Movement 20 years ago, spoke against South Africa, bringing the crowd in the university's Sproul Plaza alive once

The demonstrations are part of the opposition to South Africa's policy of racial separation that has occurred at college campuses around

Since November the council, among other things, has declared the city a sanctuary for Central American refugees; passed an ordinance guaranteeing full benefits to the unmarried "domestic partners" of city employees, hetcrosexual or homosexual; applied rent controls to commercial properties in an effort to preserv a colorful shopping district near the campus, agreed to binding arbitration for all city emoyee unions; banned conversion of apartment buildings to condominiums; and established a commission to develop policies on foreign relations issues for the city. The actions have exacerbated already tense relations between, on the one hand, students and low income residents, who now have political control of the city, and on the other, more affluent residents who live in the green hills that rise above the city.

As the South Africa protests were under way. large crowd of Berkeley residents last week protested a rather modest plan by the City Council to build scattered groups of low-income housing in residential neighborhoods.

Salesmen prefer expenses to adding a taxable bonus to their income.

But many executives doing a good job for the company may argue that "the end justifies the means." A manager in a New-York based brokerage firm, to motivate his sales force, gives them $1,000 bonness if they bring in 20 new accounts. But he tells his salesmen to put in for $1,000 in expenses. So far the scheme has gone undetected by top management.

The salesmen prefer putting in for expenses over adding a taxable bonus to their income. The manager looks good because his sales force is miraculously outselling other departments. And for the company, expenses are tax-deductible. It would have to

That idea - which did not work out, largely because the parties could not agree on an appropriate fee - illustrates one of the most common ways that corporations try to get the most interest income possible. The practice, known as "remote disbursement," is legal because it does not cross the line as E.F. Hutton did when it got interest income from money belonging to others.

Hutton succeeded in bilking banks — managing to use millions of dollars a day in bank funds without the banks' knowledge largely because of three factors.

First, the banks' account records did not distinguish between, on the one hand, cash and checks that had already cleared and, on the other hand, checks that had not yet cleared. So a bank might allow Hutton to withdraw $4 million from an account that had a $4-million check deposit in it, even though the bank would not get the funds

Dollar Higher In European And U.S. Trade

NEW YORK - The dollar rose broadly Tuesday in the United States and Europe, helped by expectations of stronger economic growth in the United States.

With many senior traders gathering in Toronto for a foreign-exchange dealers' convention, activity was quiet. But European currency dealers said dollars were in strong demand Tuesday because of the usual month-end buying by corpora-tions that must settle their ac-

Traders also said they expect U.S. economic growth to improve in the second quarter and were awaiting Thursday's scheduled release of the U.S. index of leading indicators for further chies.

In New York, the pound closed at $1.2535, down from $1.2550 on the previous trading day. The dollar ended at 3.112 Deutsche marks, up from 3.097 DM; at 9.485 French francs, up from 9.440 francs; at 2.6140 Swiss francs, up from 2.6080

In London, the pound ended at $1.2515, down slightly from $1.2595 at the previous close. In Frankfurt, the dollar ended at 3.1127 DM, up from 3.0805 DM, while in Paris, the U.S. currency finished at 9.49 French francs, up from 9.4025

NEW YORK — The stock market showed no clear trend Tuesday after an early advance on the New York Stock Exchange faltered. Issues involved in takeover and buyback news drew most of the attention in a relatively quiet post-holiday session. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up more than 5 points in early trading, finished with a loss of 0.45 loss, at 1.301.52.

came to 90.60 million shares, compared with 85.97 million last Friday. Declining interest rates have been cited as a primary force behind the rally in stock prices since May 1, and they kept dropping Tuesday.

Prices of long-term government bonds, which move in the opposite direction from interest rates, rose more than $10 for every $1,000 in face value. Though rates are well below their recent peaks, analysts noted, they still are relatively high in comparison to inflation. As long as inflation remains subdued, optimists argue, there is room for further declines in the cost of borrowing money.

The Federal Reserve has apparently given the downward trend in rates some further impetus with the reduction of its discount rate, from 8 to 7½ percent, it announced a week ago Friday.

With all that, analysts said, traders appeared to be reluctant to chase after stocks at the lofty levels they have reached. Rather, they seemed inclined to cash in on some of the market's recent gains.

Brokers also said it was natural for investors to be proceeding warily as they awaited Tues-

Under the Cash Advance Ac counting System, the company can charge the executives' cash advances on their American Express corporate cards. Because cash advances show up on the American Express monthly bills, accounting departments can easily doublecheck outstanding each advances.
Another alternative is Consolidated Billing: American Express's billing system in Europe now provides aggregate statements for up to 99 corporate cards. "The prob-lem was that someone had to add cost centers' and divisions' state-ments," says Mrs. Nixon. "Now we do that for them and can organize the data according to how much was spent by what division on hotels, restaurants, animes and car rentals." By providing a senior fi-nancial manager with an aggregate picture of what different divisions are spending, American Express says any spending anomalies are more likely to show up.

But for American Express to effectively control a company's total travel and entertainment costs, a large percentage of executives in the company would have to have the corporate card.

Some companies believe their control mechanisms are tight enough as it is. "We don't believe the Cash Advance Accounting System will increase control, we have so much control already," says Roy Westpac to Lift Prime Weekly, manager of accounts payable at Ford Motor Co. Ltd. What Ford is hoping is that the Cash Advance Accounting System will reduce the company's long-term and short-term cash advances by 50 pervisory authorities who might otherwise block expansion plans. While the new holding company would be subject to less stringent supervision than primary insurance underwriters because it would function as a reinsurance company, supervision would be unchanged for non-life and life insurance activities of its subsidiaries, he said. The parent company recorded a 1984, little changed from 254.93 million in 1983. Premium income increased to 7.82 billion DM from company profit-income ratio to 2.1 percent from 3.6 percent in 1983, Mr. Schieren said, adding that writing profits and higher profits

Underwriting profits in both the parent and the domestic group were reduced by around 130 million DM by a hailstorm in the Munich area last July that cost Allianz 315 million DM in claims, Mr.

In addition, the domestic group was burdened by high losses on North American reinsurance business, while a hoped-for improvement in earnings on foreign nonlife business did not materialize.

Mr. Schieren said the reorganiza tion was designed to give Allianz closer control of the performance of each of its profit centers. It calls for divisions between domestic and foreign business, between primary insurance under-writing and reinsurance, and come a holding company.

Ajinomoto Co. Sees Drugs As Promising Growth Area

TOKYO -- Ajinomoto Co., best known for its flavor-enhancer monosodium glutamate, expects drugs and biotechnology products to be its biggest growth areas in the next 15 years, its vice president,

The company is diversifying from cancer research into research on hypertension and antibiotics, he said.

Ajinomoto holds the patent for the potential anti-cancer agent interleukin-2 and has applied for approval from the Health and Welfare Ministry to market an anti-cancer drug, Lentinan, which was ointly developed with Yamanouchi Pharmaceutical Co. he said Mr. Suznki also said that Aiinomoto plans to enlarge its amino acid lant in North Carolina and may build one in Europe, though it has not decided where or when. It will complete other ammo acid plants in Thailand and the United States this year, he said. Ajinomoto's sales of amino acids, including the low-calorie sweetener aspartame, show a 20-percent annual growth rate compared with

3-to-5-percent growth rate for prepared foods and other products, Aspartame alone showed a 100-percent increase in sales in the fiscal ear ended March 31, he said. At present, only Ajinomoto and G.D. Searle & Co. of the United States produce and market aspartame through technical and supply agreements including a joint venture in Europe.

Toyo Soda Manufacturing Co. announced plans last month to start European production of aspartame in 1987, when Searie's sales patent apires everywhere except in the United States. Toyo Soda said it may start selling its aspartame from Japanese plants before then in countries where Searle has no patent.

Mr. Suzuki said Ajinomoto was confident about maintaining its ead because it will have larger plants and better technology. Ajinomoto last week announced parent-company net profit of 11.87 billion yen ($47.4 million) in the year ended March 31 against 0.59 billion in the previous year on sales of 447.57 billion yen against still a long way from seeing the full financial impact of its drug, called minoxidil, Upjohn may already be realizing considerable benefits from the cottage industry that has grown up around the compound. Minoxidil has the approval of the U.S. Food and Drug Adminis-

THE CIDER HOUSE RULES

By John Irving. 560 pages. $18.95. William Morrow, 105 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10016.

Reviewed by

Christopher Lehmann-Haupt THE RULES referred to in the title of John Irving's new novel are the rules that are posted by the light switch in the cider house of Ocean View apple orchard on the coast of Maine, where about half the action of Irving's story is set. "Please don't operate the grinder or the press if you've been drinking," one of them typically reads. But these rules are more or less ignored. An altogether different set is followed by the mi-grant workers who stay in the cider bouse. A typical one holds that if you get in a knile light, typical one holds that if you get in a kinic light, you cut your opponent just enough to end the fight, not enough to hospitalize him and attract the authorities. Naturally, there is a good deal of cutting in "The Cider House Rules."

Similarly, two sets of rules vie with one another at the locale where the rest of Irving's noted is set. The law of early 20th continues novel is set. The law of early 20th-century United States says that doctors should not commit abortions. But at St. Cloud's orphanage, which is inland from Ocean View and is a different sort of orchard, Dr. Wilbur Larch follows his own rules.

"No one," he believes, "should ever make a woman have a baby she didn't want to have." Therefore he "was an obstetrician, but when he was asked — and when it was safe — he was an abortionist, too."

The point - which is driven home with the sledgehammer effect that Irving usually uses is that there are always multiple sets of rules for a given society. Heroism lies in discovering the right ones, whether they are posted on the wall or carved with scalpels, and committing yourself to follow them no matter what. Actually, this is a sharper point than Irving has made in any of his previous five novels, the best-known of which have been "The World According to Garp" (1978) and "The Hotel New Hampshire" (1981). His novels have tended to sprawl both in tone and focus, but in "The Cider House Rules" he has positively streamlined his form.

Even Irving's excesses seem a little less excessive. It's true that the novel is full of the mixture of comedy and violence that by now has become almost the author's trademark. An excessively outdoorsy couple goes swimming in some rapids and gets swept away and killed by a log drive. A lobsterman who loves to tinker blows himself and his lobster pound. pieces while building a homemade torpeda.

The novel is also full of Irving's special brand of cuteness. The family of a man dying of Alzheimer's Disease (they've always thought him a drunk) can't remember the word Als-heimer's and so refers to it as Al's Hammer disease. An interfering trustee of the St. Cloud's orphanage wants to accuse Larch of being "a nonpracticing homosexual."

And yet the familiar elements of the maca-bre, the violent and the cute all seem more controlled and pointed, more dedicated to the end of advancing living's story toward a devi-nite and coherent resolution. It is as if he had made up his mind to stop pretending to be anything but a realist writing a morality tale, and to devote all his strengths and weatherses to that particular end.

ries will be played here Thursday. It was a humiliating defeat for the Lakers, who swept to their fourth straight Western Conference title by averaging 131.1 points a game. Said the losers' Bob Mc-Adoo: "I don't think the Celtics can play any better. If they can, I don't want to see it."

Ahead by 79-49 at intermission, Boston set title-series records for most first-half points, biggest halftime lead and total points. The previous marks were 76 points (the Celtics in the first half against St. Louis in 1960); a 27-point halftime (New York over the Lakers in 1970) and a 142 total (Boston against the Lakers in 1965).

Boston's 62 field goals were a record for a championship-series game, and its 60.8 percent floor shooting percentage erased the mark of 60.6, set by the Lakers against the Knicks in 1970.

The Chies bettered the Lakers

The Celtics battered the Lakers inside and outside. Kevin McHale, Larry Bird and Robert Parish, the starting front line, produced 63 points, while Scott Wedman led devastating perimeter shooting mek of Czechoslovakia. The toast man star, was forced to pull out of of the country two years ago when the tournament because of a leg became the first Frenchman injury. His spot in the draw was miss a shot in 11 tries that included four 3-point baskets.

Said Ray Williams, who made 6 points and had 5 assists in 14 minutes: "Robert, Larry and Kevin just took them completely out of (Boston had a 48-35 edge in rebounds). "You can't run when you don't have the ball and they didn't see much of the ball, did they?"

The Lakers had only two leads, at 2-0 and again at 9-8 on an 18footer by Earvin Johnson. It was the last field goal the Lakers scored for almost three minutes as the Celtics took over the boards and got their running game going.

Danny Ainge scored 15 of his 19 points in the first quarter to paye the way to a 38-24 advantage. He made seven of his first nine shots, including six in a row. "I thought the key was stopping their first break," Ainge said. "It set the tone for the entire game." The winners' running game was at its best in the 41-point second quarter, when they shot 16 for 24, including two 3-pointers by Wed-man and one by Ainge. Boston's first half included 20-5 and 18-3 scoring runs.

There was no letup. In the third period, said center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, "we were just wondering how bad it could get. And it got worse." The Celtics made 68 percent of their fourth-quarter shots.

"You could see their egos crumbling," said Boston's Cedric Max-well. "It's like I'm talking to you and I suddenly slapped you. You'd have a shocked look on your face, wouldn't you? That's what they looked like."

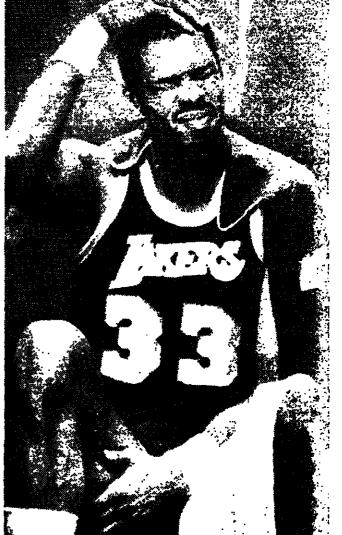

The game got rough in the third period. With 7:58 left, Ainge picked up a technical foul for throwing a ball at Byron Scott, and McHale and Kurt Rambis got into a shoving match.

"Byron got me with a forearm to the back of the head, and I lost my cool," said Ainge of the technical, which cost him $100. "I thought it

And it is mainly a matter of herve. Were both teams at full strength, I would say Juventus had the finer skills. But then again Liverpool, riddled with injuries and potentially ripe for the plucking, has the considerable psychological

> No one at either club sees anything in the Italians' 2-0 victory over Liverpool in last winter's so--called Super Cup. It was played in Turin in foul conditions and with a somewhat partial referee. Yet afterward Osvaldo Bagnoli, who astutely guided Verona to the Italian championship, observed, "Against teams that play a zonal game" — and Liverpool does, marking territonally rather than man-to-man -"Juve goes on honeymoon."

Maybe she does, but honeymoons can be stormy. Says Ray Wilkins, an Englishman well adapted at AC Milan: "I find myself shouting at players to stay cool, not to get emotional. This is where Italians are so different from the English. If you get on top of your marker, you'll crucify him because his temperament will collapse."

But just who is to crucify whom? Uncharacteristically, Liverpool arrived in Brussels late Tuesday uncertain of its lineup and of the fitness of several key players. Manager Joe Fagan announced the fol-lowing team (which contradicted stories in the early-evening papers that quoted players as saying they had "no chance of being fit"): goalie Bruce Grobbelaar, defenders Phil Neal, Mark Lawrenson, Alan Hansen, Jim Beglin; midfielders Jim Nichol, Kenny Dalglish, John Wark and Ronnie Whelan; forwards Ian Rush and Paul Waish.

The injury doubts begin at the heart of the defense. Ireland international Lawrenson plays precisely two weeks after dislocating a shoul-der blade, the kind of injury that lineers in the mind like a toothache. In midfield, omitting specialists Sammy Lee, Jan Moldy and Kevin MacDonald, Liverpool opts for Dalglish. In so doing it disturbs its finest attacking duet, which had overcome the scalpel and the aging

Trapattoni will preach some-

Eight of the last nine finals — which have yielded few goals indeed — will have featured an English champion. Nottingham Forest won the trophy twice, Aston Villa once, and — in 1977, 1978, 1981 and 1984 — Liverpool I doubt the men in red will show much British chivalry toward Italy's old lady this time either.

Schmidt's home run was his sixth of the season and his first this year with runners on base.

Mets 8, Dodgers 1

In New York, Ray Knight had a homer and four RBIs and Mookie Wilson had four hits as the Mets drubbed Los Angeles. Knight, filling in for the injured Kelvin Chapman, had started 11 games lifetime at second base - the last one being in 1978. Two errors ran the Dodgers' major league leading total to 56; they have led to 42 unearned runs. Said Manager Tom Lasorda: "I really believe the next game we play, we'll play well defensively. I really believe that." Giants 6, Expos 1

In Montreal, Chris Brown drove in two runs and Jeff Leonard added a bases-loaded double to give San Francisco its first triumph in four games. Atlee Hammaker won for the first time since last Sept. 1.

Astros 4, Pirates 2 In Houston, the Astros scored all their runs in the second, on a triple by Phil Garner, Terry Puhl's tworum double and a single by Craig Reynolds. Loser Jose DeLeon (0-7) is on a 1-16 streak. Said Pirate catcher Tony Pena: "He's still throwing hard -he's just throwing the ball all over the place."

OBSERVER Truly Awful Things

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — It's my conten-tion that there have never been so many Truly Awful Things as there are today. There is a professional football league that plays football all summer long, for example. That is a Truly Awful Thing.

I doubt that the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Medes or the Persians, who thrived in a thoroughly mattractive era and put up with some pretty awful stuff, would have tolerated summer football.

I imagine word reaching the Assyrian king that a cabal of capitalists is gathered at the Nineven Plaza Hotel drawing up a plot. "A plot." (This is the king talking, and you know how kings feel about

Do you think the king is going to sit still for that? Hah!

I hear him hissing, "Football right on through the baseball sea-son? That is one Truly Awful Thing." (All right, you can't hiss that in English, but the king isn't speaking English, is he? He's speaking Assyrian.)

Next day at the Plaza the Assyrian comes down like a wolf on the fold, cohorts gleaming in purple and gold, and it's curtains for one group of capitalists so greedy they were ready to inflict a Truly Awful Thing on humanity.

Here is another Truly Awful

And yet, some very decent American of modern Syrian heritage will send a letter - "sick and tired of seeing our people stereotyped as wolves because of that idiotic Lord Byron with his purple-

Knowing all this, why not forget Assyrians and cite Babylonians or Medes as tough cookies who would have known how to stamp out a summer-football pestilence? Because it would make no difference. Choose Medes and there will be angry mail from Americans who Mede blood. ("I'm sick and tired of these Mede stereotypes . . . ") Babylonians? It's hard to believe, but there are people out there somewhere whose sensitivities are bruised every time Babylonians are criticized. It is a certainty, because the land is swarming with people willing to spend their lives being offended.

Spending a life in quest of of-fense in order to enjoy a righteous outrage is a Truly Awful Thing which did not exist, except among hopeless neurotics, until the 1960s. It was a byproduct of the black civil rights movement, which provided such a heroic spectacle of abused people fighting for their rights that before long very few Americans, including those already possessed of all rights guaranteed by the Constitution plus many others provided by wealth, could resist the pleasure of struggling heroically for their own rights.

'Hope for the Best, Expect the Worst'

'Miracles of Courage' at a Clinic for Gravely Ill Children in Boston

By Dudley Clendinen New York Times Service

OSTON — Andrea Caley,
who is considered a trouper, came in a white knit cap in her brother Daniel's stroller - the cap because she had lost her hair, the stroller because she was tired. Her mother, Kristin, had Daniel, a package of homemade cereal candy for the staff, and a smile. Her 4-year-old sister Roberta pushed the stroller.

"Too tired to walk today, Andrea?" Sue Thompson, a nurse,

"Tooooo tired," said Andrea, who is 5. Her bone marrow transplant had failed.

April, 4, who is considered dramatic, came prepared to yell when they put in the needle for her chemotherapy transfusion.

"I hear more fussing and moaning and groaning in here!" said Jason Vitale, 6. "Now I know I'm the bravest one." His mother, Martha smiled at her sturdy, brown-haired boy.

The pain, the bravery of children, is always affecting, but it is the bravery of parents of critically ill children that drew Monica Dickens here to write a book, "Miracles of Courage."

The sudden hospitalization of her grandchild for a rare disease awakened her writer's instincts to the plight of parents of children who might die: uncertain of the outcome, with no opportunity for heroics, they simply have to cope, day after day.

For Dickens, a great-grand-daughter of Charles Dickens and a Cape Cod resident who has written novels and autobiographical accounts, it became her 35th

"I think you get used to it, and you do what you have to do," Mrs. Caley said. The parents here seem to speak that way of themselves, as simply adjuncts of their children, doing the obvious, the necessary things. "You holding me, Daddy?" sobbed Kenny, who is 4 years old. He was held motionless, his small back exposed to the needle, and he could not see his father, Scott Bailey, who said, "I'm holding

"He's the tower of strength," Bailey said quietly afterward, ruf-fling his son's blond hair. "We just want to be here for him." Dickens, a tall, lean, lightning rod of a woman, was struck by the reputation of Truman, a Boston institution. If anyone would know what a parent goes through, people said, Truman would. Dickens came to see him, won his approval and immersed herself in the families of this clinic for what turned out to be three years, without asking myself what the purpose was, what the market for the book would be," she said the other day, adding, "I was writing a testimony to them."

cluster the drug treatments and to use them in the central nervous system and the blood. Usually, now, they can knock the leukemia into remission and hold it there for years. In about two out of three cases the children live. But they don't know which two out of three. "It's like the sword of Damocles —it's always there," Truman said. The leukemia can recur at any time in the three-year treatment. And if bone marrow transplant fails, Truman has no weapons left.

"Hope for the best, and expect the worst, that's what we did," said Andrea's mother. "And we didn't expect the worst. But when she relapsed, that's what we had to accept."

Her manner was quiet and strong. She went into the examining room where her daughter was waiting for the bone marrow needle, and as it went in she dabbed at the tears popping from Andrea's eyes.

"Ow-Ow-Ow-Ow-Ow!" Alldrea yelled, from underneath the many hands holding her steady on the table. "Ow-Ow-Ow-Ow-

Her mother dabbed calmly, efficiently, as the noise went on. And at the foot of the table, her little sister Roberta scrunched up her face and jammed a pink toy bear on her ear.
